The Balochi is a very rich language, full of vocabularies, idioms and idiomatic phrases, lullabies, folk stories, folk songs, and folk literature. It is also full of writers, poets, researchers, and linguists.

Before 19th century, Balochi was an unwritten language. The reason was that there were not any literary personality and linguists in Baloch community till mid-19th century. However, there have been a lot of literary works in Balochi language from 1950s onward. As Sayad Hashmi believed, the mid-19th period and twentieth century were renaissance of Balochi language.

The Baloch had given justice the highest place. He would never tolerate injustice in individual or collective life. The over-riding judicial philosophy was the principle of revenge and compensation. System of retaliatory justice had the strongest roots. He considered it has duty and inalienable right to do himself justice by compensating the property lost or by avenging the blood of his relative.

Ever since the mid-20th century, there have been attempts to create a unified orthography (standard script) for the Balochi language. The development of written Balochi has mainly taken place in Pakistan, where there have been advocates of both the Arabic and Roman scripts. Most literature, of course has been written in Arabic script, but even here diverging systems have been used. Different writers and language developers have advocated different orthographic systems and some of the more prolific writers have also employed different systems over time.

Sardar Mir Chakar Rind is often credited as the first Baloch Chief who played a pivotal role in bringing the Baloch together to some extent under a tribal center. However, it is essential to note that during Mir Chakar Rind's time, another influential figure, Mir Gohram Lashari, led a significant group of Baloch Chieftains from various clans. They rallied under Mir Gohram Lashari's banner, and his power was comparable to that of Mir Chakar Rind. Lashari's centrality period was marked by years of strife and differences between these factions, culminating in the traditional thirty-year wars. During this extended conflict, one side would sometimes prevail, only for the other side to regain dominance in subsequent years.
